The writing in Death Notice perfectly captures the feel of a small, rural town. Author Todd Ritter forsakes overly wordy prose in favor of straightforward storytelling that the reader can slip right into like a comfy old sweater, and the characters are so richly drawn readers will feel as though they've known the residents of Perry Hollow forever.

Now, Todd Ritter has the opportunity to join their ranks with his mystery, Death Notice. There had never been a murder in the quaint town of Perry Hollow, Pennsylvania. Police chief Kat Campbell knew the history of the mill town, since her grandparents met at the lumber mill, and her father was once the police chief.

Todd Ritter \(Author of Death Notice\) - Goodreads

Todd Ritter was born in rural Pennsylvania to a bank teller mother and a father who dabbled in taxidermy. He grew up among "Bambi"-esque forests and wide-open fields straight out of the cropduster scene from "North by Northwest."
