The last few years have brought a rich addition to the literature about Mars—that is, Mars as an idea, as cultural history. Three new books have much to offer: Robert Crossley's Imagining Mars, Robert Markley's Dying Planet, and K. Maria Lane's Geographies of Mars. While there have been quite a few previous books that trace the human fascination with Mars, most were written by space exploration enthusiasts or science fiction enthusiasts, who didn't always have much depth as cultural
