The Colors of Space was an enjoyable, imaginative young adult science fiction novel written by Marion Zimmer Bradley early on in her writing career (1963). This was a nice story about a boy forced to grow up fast and expand his understanding of the universe and the beings around him. After an adventurous search for his father, Young Bart Steele takes on the responsibility of proving that Space, through the viewport, was no longer space as he had come to know it, but a strange eerie limbo, the star-tracks lengthening, shifting color until they filled the whole viewport with shimmering, gray, recrossing light. The unbelievable reaction of warp-drive thrust them through space faster than the lights of the surrounding stars, faster than imagination could follow.
