Heart of Glasgow remains his most authoritative work on the city. Jack House was born in Glasgow in 1906 and never wanted to live anywhere else. He left school at the age of 15 and was trained as a chartered accountant, but 'saw the light' in time to give up accountancy and become a newspaperman. He wrote for newspapers and the BBC from 1928. During the Second World War he served with the

The Heart of Glasgow ebook by Jack House - Rakuten Kobo

Since Jack House first wrote this book the city has changed dramatically but within the heart of it, change has been less obvious and the medieval layout of the city still remains. These are the streets that Jack takes the reader through in a book which is neither guide, nor formal history, but something in between the two. It is a journey every visitor to Glasgow should take.

A new edition of Jack House s The Heart of Glasgow ...

In The Heart of Glasgow, however, this irritating habit of ranking Glasgow things at or near the top of a universal scale is somehow endearing. Perhaps it is because House freely admits that the book is written through the eyes of love though he also says that he may appear to hate at times (we ll come to that later, as House would say himself). It is also narrated in the style of a guided
