The Twin, translated from the Dutch by David Colmer, is that type of a book which should not work, but somehow it does. It should not work because it is too introspective and has the drama and suspense which are way too subtle. In this book, Helmer van Wonderen is a fifty-seven year old man who is living on an isolated farm in the Netherlands, carrying for his aging father. His identical twin

The Twin, by Gerbrand Bakker, is entitled Licht, Tout est Calme in France and Oben ist es Still in Germany. Translating these gives a different and more interesting slant to the story immediately: Yonder/Over There, All is Calm in French; and, more intriguing in German, it translates as On the Surface All is Still, but Oben also

The Twin by Gerbrand Bakker (Review) Tony's Reading List

The Twin (translated by David Colmer) was writer Gerbrand Bakker's first novel for adults, and as you can see on the sticker in the picture, it won the IMPAC Dublin Prize in 2010. It's set in the Dutch countryside, where Helmer, a fifty-something farmer, lives in his family's big, old house, with only his aged father for company. With his mother and his twin brother, Henk, both long dead
