The West African Slave Plantation: Mohammed Bashir Salau's case study is based principally on oral interviews with local residents conducted in the 1970s by Paul E. Lovejoy (Salau's mentor) and by Yusuf Yunusa. In 2008 Salau and Yunusa conducted two additional interviews at Faniasai. Accounts by nineteenth-century European explorers and colonial records are also used. The author is to be

"Salau's study of a plantation complex in the Sokoto caliphate fills an important gap in the global studies of slavery and plantation systems. It is an exciting exploration into a system of agricultural production, the plantation, that has not been given sufficient consideration in African history.
